THE COLORADO POTATO BUG.-From an article is the Serramento Union, we clip the following relative to this newly discovered pest. "This insect is a true beetle, belonging to the great sub-order coleoptera; that is, the hard-winged, or sheath-winged, insects. Under this sub-order it is a member of the family of leaf enters-the chrysomelids of the entomologists and here, with the name at the head of this article the insect under consideration may be found. The specific name (deryphoria decembracata) is given it on account of the ten longitudinal black lines found on its back, which alternate with orange or yellow stripes. In size it is about four-tenths of an inch long, and about three-tenths wide, and in general shape it much resembles a miniature May beetle.

In common with all members of its group, it un desgoes several transformations. It is first a tiny of stores for whaleships, they proceeded to Japan ver of a vellowish color : then it hatches into a little orange colored grab, which at length becomes half an inch long; then it burrows into the ground and to commence business for supplying whalemen with changes into a chrysalis, in which condition it is inactive, and it finally batches from this condition tion of the treaty to permit Dougherty and Reid and into the perfect beetle form, partially described shove.
